ade its appearance in our town, which might challenge the admiration of the naturalists of first rank. It has an up-right position, and all the grace, bearing and notions of the human. The only difference there is between this animal and the human, it has something in its mouth at all times, which, it their tougue, is called wax; in ours, a end. This end was invented by man as a money-making device, for which this creature spends a part of its earnings. I don't think this creature will taken to the World's Fair, but should we ever contemplate establishing a zoological garden, which the rapid growth of our town may some day demand, we should have an eye singled
